The picturesque town is built on an island and is attached to the mainland by two deepwater harbours. To the North it is joined to Tudor Creek by a toll bridge, with views over the harbour linking the town to the North Coast resorts, night clubs and restaurants. On the South side a ferry carries cars and passengers over Kilindini Creek to the entrance of the modern port area, en route to the splendid beaches and hotels on the South Coast.

Malindi

Malindi is the second largest coastal town of Kenya and it is situated about 120 km north of Mombasa just a little south of the equator. Malindi conjures up visions of a great historic town that has journeyed through ages. The culture, economy and general setup of any given place changes with time, and Malindi has journeyed through these eras with much pomp and flair.

BEST TIME TO TRAVEL

Kenya is generally a dry area with pleasant overall conditions all year round.

There is a wet season between April and June and a second in November and December.

Temperatures are consistent throughout the year and cool for an equatorial region, ranging mostly in the high 20C to low 30C.

The Kenyan coast is lined with pristine white sand beaches fringing the warm inviting waters of the Indian Ocean. Here the wilderness meets the sea, and the ocean itself holds a world of spectacular coral reefs teeming with life and colour.

The coast is a place with a long and exotic history, its calm blue waters the traditional passage of the Arabian Spice Trade. Along the length of this coast, Arab and Portuguese forts, Old Towns and the overgrown, deserted ruins of Swahili outposts bear witness to this fascinating history. In the winding medieval streets and bustling markets of Lamu and Mombasa Old Town, life has continued unhurried and unchanged for more than 400 years. This blend of natural beauty and living history creates an exotic paradise unlike anywhere else on earth.

From the time of the early Chinese and Arab traders to the Portuguese sailors and later on to European settlers who alongside other investors have transformed Malindi into a reputable destination of tourism importance. There is much warmth and hospitality of the people of Kenya to experience here in Malindi.

Getting There:

There are flights to Kenya daily from Johannesburg with add on options also available from the other major cities. Flying time is approximately 4 hours from Johannesburg and you have the choice of Kenya Airways and SAA.
